Natural gas prices ease as Freeport LNG facility remains offline following explosion

Natural gas prices plunged on Tuesday, after Freeport LNG said its facility that had a fire last week likely won't be back up and running soon.

"[C]ompletion of all necessary repairs and a return to full plant operations is not expected until late 2022," the company said Tuesday in a statement. The facility, located in Quintana Island, Texas, had an explosion last Wednesday.

resumption of partial operations is targeted to be achieved in approximately 70 days, Freeport LNG said.

U.S. natural gas fell about 16% to $7.22 per million British thermal units (MMBtu).

We have the supply to meet natural gas demand, the question is at what price, says EQT CEO

“The U.S. natural gas market will now be temporarily oversupplied as 2 bcf/d or a little over 2% of demand for U.S. natural gas has been abruptly eliminated,” said Rob Thummel, managing director at Tortoise Capital.

“U.S. natural gas supply will likely remain at current levels as producers won’t reduce production by 2 bcf/d. The result is an oversupplied U.S. natural gas market,” he added.

Freeport’s operation is roughly 17% of the U.S.’ LNG processing capacity.

Surging prices are adding to inflationary pressures across the economy. Drivers are already grappling with record prices at the pump with the national average for a gallon of gas topping \$5 over the weekend, and now utility bills are also set to rise.

Natural gas prices surged above \$9 per MMBtu in May, hitting the highest level since August 2008.

After the explosion at Freeport's facility last week, the company initially said the plant would be shut for several weeks.

"The incident occurred in pipe racks that support the transfer of LNG from the facility's LNG storage tank area to the terminal's dock facilities," the company said Tuesday. "None of the liquefaction trains, LNG storage tanks, dock facilities, or LNG process areas were impacted," the company added.
